LOOK A LITTLE AHEAD.

It is always well to have a box of salve in the house. Sunburn, cuts, bruises, piles and boils yield to DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. Should keep a box on hand at all times to provide for emergencies. For years the standard, but followed by many imitators. Be sure you get the genuine DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve.

Scenes of Period When the Old Patriots Celebrated—Mr. Gunn Recalls Interesting Incidents of Celebrations of the National Holiday by the "Old Boys."

By John T. Gunn.

The true incentive to a fitting celebration of the Fourth of July is patriotism. The right kind of a celebration leaves a lasting impression. Let me describe two such occasions:

Sixty years ago to-day your correspondent was a witness to the last old-fashioned muster of the militia of Shelby county. It was held at Chenoweth Springs on the dirt road leading from Shelbyville to Mulberry school house. A boy, then 9 years old, I could not grasp all the details, but the great crowd, the poplar stump used as a speaker's stand—the big flag—the martial music with fife and drum; the barbecue, the drilling and muster are still vivid in my mind. There were also groups of men playing marbles with the boys and various little stands from which were sold cakes, etc. Lemonade was only sold in town then and cost ten cents a glass.

But the great feature of the day was the muster. Two notable figures were General Logan and Colonel Merriwether, with cocked hats and dressed in continental uniforms with knee-breeches and buckles. The companies were mounted and the captains were distinguished by tall plumes in their hats. The marching was by fours in a long procession that filed out into a large field where the troopers swung into platoons and companies, that made a great display in showing how they could change front by the right or left wheel. This was witnessed by the spectators from an elevated spot, many on top of the rail fences or on the tree tops. The event of the day was Uncle Jack Miles mounted on his old war horse "Jim," marching up and down the road, admired by the crowd as Jim kept step to the tap of the drum. To my mind that was a great occasion.

The praise bestowed upon the heroes of the revolution and the reverence shown our country's flag inspired in me a love for the stars and stripes that has never waned but increases with added years.

The second scene was witnessed during the Atlanta campaign, July 4, 1864. On the preceding day our command filed through the town of Marietta, Ga. South of the town we formed in line of the battle on a long stretch of gently rolling cultivated lands, some distance in front of us were strong earth works occupied by Confederate soldiers. As soon as it was dark enough our skirmish line was advanced and our skirmishers worked their way close to the works. On a knoll in advance of the other skirmishers, a sergeant of Co. G, 21st Kentucky Veteran Volunteers, dug a skirmish pit with his bayonet, and was the sole occupant of it. His position was so perilous that the other soldiers were afraid to cross the open ground to reach him. At every sound the enemy's skirmishers were firing at us from their gopher holes. Very early July Fourth, the reveille was sounded and trumpeted all along the line.

SANG STAR SPANGLED BANNER.

The sound had just died away when that single soldier began to sing the "Star Spangled Banner." When he reached the chorus it was taken up by the men in the line of battle. Then every bugle and band in the entire army. It was a calm morning with an occasional light breeze. The sky was clear and the glad song echoed and reverberated through forest and plain. Indeed it was a concert, grand beyond description. The countenance of every soldier seemed radiant with joy. Following this great outburst of song the soldiers began to cheer and in the sunlight near and far the regimental standards could be seen fluttering in the breeze. They were so thrilled with enthusiasm that the line involuntarily advanced to find that the works in our front had been evacuated and that the Confederates had retreated to the Chattahoochee river.

The soldier who started that racket was Charles C. Furr, now a resident of Frankfort, Ky. His comrades used to call him Dock. For two reasons. One was he could not tolerate a long tail coat, and the other was because he grew up in a neighborhood where the weed by that name was plentiful. That was a great day for Dock. He had hard service. Tramp, tramp, tramp, day after day until his shoes were well worn and tied on with bark strings. His pants were frayed at the bottom and hung by one suspender. He had no socks and his ankles were plainly visible. The tail of his coat had disappeared and his hat brim was so broken that he had to roll it under so as to give it the appearance of a cap. Through the holes in the crown there were little tufts of hair sticking out. He looked tough, but he was game and gave ample proof of his pluck. Sauntering through a forest to see if he could pick up a ration of game of some sort he came to a little clearing and peeping through the bushes he spied a squad of Confederates seated by a spring. He saw he could not retreat, and having served under Sherman so long, he resorted to strategy. He stepped behind a tree and said: "Here they are, come on boys." He then leveled his rifle at them and ordered their surrender and they grounded their arms. After dismantling their guns he marched them into camp. There were six of them. Being asked how he took so many prisoners he replied: "By granny, I surrounded them!" If he stands up for the right now like he did then his neighbors have in him a trusty and model citizen. At the close of the day above described the lines of General Sherman's army were advanced to the hill tops overlooking the Chattahoochee river and the evening was spent by the bands playing national airs and the soldiers singing patriotic songs.

are caused by indigestion. If you eat a little too much, or if you are subject to attacks of indigestion, you have no doubt had shortness of breath, rapid heart beats, heartburn or palpitation of the heart. Indigestion causes the stomach to expand—swell, and puff up against the heart. This crowds the heart and interferes with its action, and in the course of time the heart becomes diseased.

digests what you eat, takes the strain off of the heart, and contributes nourishment, strength and health to every organ of the body. Cures indigestion, dyspepsia, sour stomach, inflammation of the mucous membranes lining the stomach and digestive tract, nervous dyspepsia and catarrh of the stomach.

After eating, my food would distress me by making my heart palpitate and I would become very weak. Finally I got a bottle of Kodol and it gave me immediate relief. After using a few bottles I am cured.

MRS. LORING NICHOLS, Penn Yan, N. Y.

I had stomach trouble and was in a bad state as I had heart trouble with it. I took Kodol Dyspepsia Cure for about four months and it cured me.
